

Departments of France, and Department Archives

This paper has been created as part of the Understanding France Series

<https://anglersrest.net/category/european-ancestors/france/understanding-france-series/> and is an extract from the Researching Ancestors from Continental Europe Pharos Course
(750) <https://www.pharostutors.com/details.php?coursenumber=750>

The structure of administration after the Revolution across France changed, and was divided into Departments, Districts or Regions, Cantons and Communes. This is important for those undertaking genealogy research in France, as where you look for information will depend on what you are looking for. Some is held at local level, in the Communes, whilst other material is potentially held at Departmental, Region, or Canton level.

Departments - initially there were 82, but this was expanded as the population grew, especially near the capital. There are now 96 of these excluding the overseas territories. Each Department has a unique number which is used for a variety of administrative reasons - vehicle registration, postcodes for examples.

Districts or Regions - Until the end of 2015 there were 22 regions, with 5 overseas regions. Following government discussions there was a change from January 2016, there are now 13 + 5 overseas regions

Districts (arrondissements) - of these there are 342 which breaks down into

Cantons - of these there are 2,054 and that further breaks down into

Communes - there are 36,529 and this is the lowest level of administration across France.

Listed on the following pages is the Departmental Archives for France, including the Overseas Territories. Mostly these indicate material that is available online, but there is so much more available at the actual archives themselves. The online offerings are constantly being updated, so do visit the websites often, otherwise you may miss some fascinating gems! At the end of the document is a list of some generic French research sites.
